“ I just learned of Alan's passing. We were neighbors for a few years until my family moved away. Alan was quiet and kept to himself but for the day I locked myself out of our home and he graciously allowed me to use his phone to get help. From that day forward we were friends. He and my husband shared an interest in music, guitars, and cars. He talked to us about the son that he lost. When we invited him to spend Christmas Eve with us, he seemed so genuinely appreciative of the invitation and shared fond stories of his childhood and living in England while his dad was working over there. After dinner, we watched a Chuck Barry documentary that Alan had been eager to share with us. It was as terrific as he said it would be. After we moved we continued to stay in touch until life got busy with more children. I am sorry we didn't try harder to stay in touch. Alan was such a sweet man. I pray he is truly resting in peace now.

“ I wish I knew what happened, Alan. I send you peace and love to the great beyond. Hope you brought your guitar to entertain your fellow angels. See you in the next life.

“ Remembering a dear friend of mine: Alan was a very special and talented soul. He loved music, and many different genres of music, at that. Quirky, but friendly, he had a gentle soul. He will truly be missed.
