“ Hey Rick, it's been 7 years as of today. I've been thinking about you all day. I still have a hard time believing your gone. I miss you and hope you are with the rest of the family. And now if you are you have Bobby with you. God I hope you two are at peace. I'm holding on to the belief that all is good where you are at. My love to you my son. Maybe one day we will reunite again in another place full of peace and happiness. As you know today is your mother's birthday and since she is probably there with you hug her for me too. I might not post to often, but I never forget. You will always be loved and missed. Love you Dad.

“ Hi Rick,\n This is Dad. I am so sorry it took so long. I have been in denial and running away for the past six years. I miss you so much. I am believing that you are with the rest of the family and are at peace. And since today is your Birth Day you are celebrating it with them. I am proud to have had you as my son and am sorry you are gone from us. I love you and miss you very much. Since I do believe you can still look down on all of us. I want to wish you a Happy Birth Day and as always I will never forget the time we had with you. You might be gone from this earth but, you will never be forgotten. And I hope it gives you added peace that your beautiful daughter is being taken care of and is growing up so fast. Again I love you and dearly miss you. Rest in peace my eldest son. You truly deserve to be at peace. Love and miss you always Dad.

“ I sit and wonder why this happened to you and I know I will never get answers. I still cannot believe Ricky is gone. You drove me crazy and could be a pain in the you know what at times, but I still love ❤️ you! You did not deserve to die so young and to leave your little angel Chloe to grow up without her father. Ricky I know you loved her with everything you had to give from the bottom of your heart and sole. So many young ones leaving this world. I know in my heart Pop, Patti, and David with Duke were right their waiting to guide you through your journey to a peaceful place In Heaven. Those of you who knew or did not know him may not have been aware of his bipolar disease. This is not a easy condition to live with and his mind could never rest. Now with the grace of God, he is finally at Rest In Peace. Love you Ricky and miss you terribly. I will see you on the other side when it is my time, until then Rest In Peace my Dear Nephew and remember you are and always were loved, Your Aunt Laura Oates Ehrman.

“ It really wasn't secret that most times, you and I never quite 'got along'. At the end of the day, you're family and that love was always there. Most people didn't know about your true struggles and hardships that haunted you constantly. I can say this with certainty, I saw the glimmer in your eyes when you revealed the news that you were going to be a Dad! I was able to witness the adoring love and attention you gave to Chloe when she arrived. A blind man could see that little girl had you wrapped around her finger and you loved her more than anything in this world. Unanswered questions of the how and why you were taken will remain, but the positive things will be remembered. I know you're in good company and your mind is finally able to be peaceful! Rest easy cousin.
